

Jo Page Long Bio

From the windswept shores of Port Lincoln to festival stages across Australia, Jo Page's powerhouse vocals leave audiences spellbound. Blending country grit, soul, blues, and rock, her music is a rich tapestry of storytelling — fierce in one breath, tender in the next. Her performances are as raw as they are magnetic; the kind that make you stop, listen, and feel.

For more than 15 years, this self-funded independent artist has carved her place in the Australian music scene, performing hundreds of shows a year and sharing stages with icons including Eskimo Joe, Birds of Tokyo, Daryl Braithwaite, and Shannon Noll. Heralded as “a force of nature” by Aussie music legend Dobe Newton after her acceptance into Tamworth's CMAA Academy, Jo commands the stage with a presence impossible to ignore.

Her songwriting runs on rebellion and redemption, weaving sky-chasing wonder with raw, lived truth. A lifelong nature lover and humanitarian, Jo's art mirrors the awe of starlit nights, rolling storms, and open roads. Off stage, she uses her platform to raise awareness for mental health, support Lifeline and the Cancer Council, and champion honest conversations about healing and hope — work that earned her recognition as a 2021 Active Citizen of the Year.

Whether she's belting an anthem that shakes the back row or pouring her heart into a ballad that silences a crowd, Jo Page proves that the most powerful stories come from those brave enough to tell them.
